Shri. R. Dileep, IPS, Commissioner of Police, Hubballi-Dharwad, while inaugurating the workshop opined that data privacy and police generally do not go hand in hand because police while digging into the evidence are likely to tamper with the privacy of the public. However after the emergence of the concept of cyber security and data protection the police are doubly committed to act with utmost care towards this end. Further, he pointed that though Covid-19 indeed has an overall adverse impact, yet it has paved way for the world to go more digital. This in turn has led to more challenges to combat in this digital realm. Though cyber crimes are borderless crimes but still we are unable to evolve a universal mechanism to investigate the same. Further he observed that Zoom platform is being used in police department also and even courts are conducting the proceedings on virtual platform. However some lacuna is being faced while adducing evidence. Hence eminent lawyers are required to come forward with appropriate suggestions. He hoped this workshop will shed light over these aspects and ways to combat these emerging challenges in the areas of cyber security.

Sri. Na. Vijayashankar, Chairman, Foundation of Data Protection Professionals in India, Bengaluru in his keynote address highlighted the importance of virtual meeting in the present era of pandemic. KLE Law College has widely opted E-educational platform and this workshop is an indication of its successful momentum and therefore the knowledge empowerment to the society without profit motive should be strived for. Anami, Prinsipal, KLE Institute of Technology, Hubballi presided over the function.

Sri. Na. Vijayashankar in the first technical session on Data Protection and Right to Privacy, opined that India should be self-reliant in respect of data protection and efforts should be made in imparting knowledge to the public relating to the data protection. This can be positively achieved by launching certification programmes and secondly by implementation of widely acclaimed economically favourable mechanisms. He pointed out that Cyber laws and Technology are intertwined. Therefore the engineering students, forensic persons should co-ordinate with lawyers to combat the cyber crime issues.

Dr. Pavan kumar C, Asst. Prof. Department of Computer Science & Engg., Indian Institute of Information Technology, Dharwad, imparted his lecture on the topic “Internet Fundamentals”. He stated that Asia stands at its peak in digital users. He enlightened in depth on significant aspects like Internet Registered Structure, Global Policy Co-ordination, Aggregation and Portability, Internet Protocol, Registration of Domain and Storage etc.

Shri. Nagendra Javagal, IT GRC Manager at Indidge Systems, USA, Bengaluru in the second technical session on Obligations for Data Processor and rights of Principals starting from the concept of personal data processing, he emphasized upon the role and obligations of data controller, data processor and data subjects. He also highlighted the various rights of data subjects ranging from right to access the personal data, right to erasure, right to data portability, right to restrict etc. Finally the session was concluded with a remark that accountability in all spheres should be a mandatory criteria for data processing.

Shri.V. Rajesh Kumar, Group Manager, Privacy and Data Protection Office, Infosys, Bengaluru, Karnataka, in the second technical session on “Compliance Issues in Data Protection”, discussed the importance of organizations which process personal data complying with the legal and regulatory requirements namely law, fairness, transparency and protection. Major issues dealing with accountability and governance were emphasized upon. The role of Data Protection Officer was highlighted. Further, he expressed that, Data Protection Bill will answer all the queries pertaining to these issues. Dr. Sharad G.Joshi, Dean(Academics) and Professor of Civil Engineering, KLEIT, Hubballi and Dr. Yerriswamy T. Professor & Head, CSE, KLEIT, Hubballi, moderated the discussions.
